have had an opportunity of preparing it for the public eye. We would recommend it to this young lady, for by her own mode of calculation, we guess her to be about seventeen, instead of pleading one fault in palliation of another, or setting up her volumes as mile-stones to mark her progress thro' life, either to relinquish the profession of author altogether, or subject her imagination to the discipline of meditation and reflection, which alone can qualify her for the honourable but arduous task of instructing her sex, by setting before them a model of WOMAN for their imitation. Q.
